
GREATER EURASIA: BUILDING DIALOGUE IN THE AGE OF UNCERTAINTY

The continent with 60% of Earth's population and that generates 65% of the global economy is in the midst of deep geopolitical conflicts that could have a dangerous impact on all humanity. Even though Eurasia has always been a space of permanent confrontations, today, security threats are on the rise amid the war in Ukraine, fragile recovery from the Covid-19 pandemic, rising economic disruption, and international organizations' decreased authority for conflict resolution. What is the future of Eurasia in the context of current conflicts and geopolitical shifts? Is there a way for the East and West to rebuild trust, and what role can Central Asia play in this process?

This session is organized in partnership with Institute of World Economics and Politics and the Astana Club Dialogue Platform.
